Sonnet 18, Avi Baruch,

This sonnet starts off with a simple question, should I compare you to a summer day. It is referring to a person in love, this sonnet is someone in love talking to who they love. Then the sonnet says how summer doesn't last long enough and sometimes there are rough winds. It is referring to how a relationship is never perfect, there will always be issues and sometimes the love even may have to end, but just like summer it will come again. Then it says that sometimes the sun could be too bright or be covered with clouds, talking about the need for a perfect balance in a relationship. The sonnet says that this could happen by accident or just because of nature, just like in a love where unfortunate things may happen or things that were always bound to happen happen. "But thy eternal summer shall not fade, Nor lose possession of that fair thou ow'st." the lover is saying that no matter if the sun gets cloudy or too bright or nature happens their love will never fade and their love will always be amazing. Even something like death can't part these two lovers once they are together. The lover says all this to end on the fact that their love will never fade no matter what happens, they go as far as to say that as long as people are on this earth and they can see their love will always be there.
